[HABITS, SKILLS]

- Look at the fate of people and murmur.

[IMPRESSION, OTHER NOTES]

- The embodiment of the "prayer" of people.
- A viewer who is aware of his own power.

[POSITION, OBJECTIVES]

An incarnation of "prayer" that gave a temporary dream in response to Sukuna's wish after picking up a piece of the Dresden Slate. The main body is an enormous force that is generated by the connection of people's prayers, and the child's shape is only a provisional appearance. For a long time, he has given the power of the seven colors of "King" to humans with a strong desire through the contact point of the Slate.

Although it does not have a clear intention and does not have the criteria to judge whether someone is right or wrong, he gives a "retribution" by grouping them with power commensurate with their sincerity as the nature of the prayer that he himself constitutes. Even if the situation and the result it brings are kept quiet, he never interferes with them.

[PERSONALITY, CONDUCT]

There is nothing that seems emotional. It's just there.

Give if you want, show if you look, respond if they ask, leave if you refuse.

[FATE, ENDING]

Each and every one of the offerings of the people is the result of a little prayer that never changes or disappears. Even if they lose the point of contact with the Slate, it still exists somewhere.
